Purpose

Now, "IWRM" is the international "watchword" for achieving the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and for the strategic process of sustainable water resources management. For implementation of IWRM in Asia-Pacific Region, it is important to cope with the global health and environmental issues and also it is vital to focus on water-related issues arising from floods and droughts. More importantly, more attention should be called to the unique situation surrounded by Asia-Pacific Region where further development of water resources will be expected to meet increasing water demand in the near future.

At the symposium, NARBO member nations/organizations (RBO et al.) that have effective mechanisms to contribute directly to the 1st Asia-Pacific Water Summit's themes such as "Water Security", "Water Financing", "Water-related Disaster Management" and "Water for Development and Ecosystem" will report ongoing process of water resources management. It is expected that the symposium will create an opportunity to deepen mutual understandings among participants about the necessity of IWRM practice reflecting its regional approach to reduce water-related disasters and develop water resources to meet anticipated water demands.
